Deconstructing and Reconstructing Racial Identity—Get Involved! The strange history of the concept of race (generally thought to have originated in the 15th or 16th century and codified into a system of social classification in North America in the 17th and 18th century) took a new turn just recently as an individual classified (by himself and others) as a member of a theretofore excluded and marginalized race ascended to the most powerful position in the world.
