REVIEW: The Shadow of Christ in the Law of Moses. It is the intent of Poythress in his signature work "The Shadow of Christ in the Law of Moses", to do two things: one, to demonstrate to the reader exactly how the ancient Hebrew traditions described in the Torah relate to and foreshadow the coming messiah Jesus Christ, and two, to compare and contrast the punishments that the Old Testament prescribes for certain crimes to the penalties imposed by our modern penal system today.

The earthly tabernacle was a copy or a shadow of the true dwelling place of God in heaven (Heb 8:5; 9:24). It showed what God was like and what was needed to deal with sin. In this way it symbolized what the Messiah was to do for our salvation. We may say that it "foreshadowed" the Messiah and his work.

"Shadows" are a fitting way to describe the types of Christ in the Old Testament because shadows provide an idea of what something looks like without completely revealing the object. The Old Testament does this with Christ. A shadow is evidence that something is casting it, or in the case of Christ, it is Someone.

- Which are a shadow of the things to come, but the body is of Christ (Galatians 3:23-25; Galatians 4:4; 2 Corinthians 3:11, 13; Hebrews 7:18, 19; Hebrews 9:11-14; Hebrews 10:1-4). The apostle's opponents, we imagine, taught in Platonic fashion that these things were shadows of ideal truth and of the invisible world (comp. Hebrews 8:5 ), forms necessary to our apprehension of spiritual things.

The simple and beautiful idea was that the cross should dominate all the business of earthly life, and that all transactions, interests and concerns should ever be under that shadow of the cross. "Under the shadow of the cross" -- how much this phrase suggests of sweetness, sacredness and practical consecration.
