4. Be honest about what you don't know. Nobody likes a know-it-all (especially a know-it-all that doesn't actually know it all). If your agents aren't sure how to troubleshoot a problem, it's okay for them to let the customer know they'll get in touch with the right person and circle back when they have an answer. Maintain an open dialogue with your customers and keep them informed at all times; it'll earn your customer's respect and commitment.
